

Liz Wolf

Sculptor

“The Twin Dreamers”

I went on a day trip with a fellow artist to visit her friend at the Nambé Pueblo in New Mexico. He was the caretaker of the Nambé Buffalo (Bison) Herd. He started us out on a hike along a creek that took us to Nambé Falls. Then we circled back to an open area and our guide said “they will be coming soon”. We stood quiet in a field and slowly the buffalos began to appear one by one. Then our guide said “Look, here come the Twin Dreamers”. At that moment I got goose bumps and could have fallen to my knees, Twin Dreamers! It was at that very moment the inception of the sculpture “The Twin Dreamers” flashed through my mind and heart.

My curiosity researched the rarity of twin buffalos and the odds are .04%. Because of this rarity it made me think of the Sacred White Buffalo. Studies show that white buffalos are one in every 10 million. I decided to have the twins sleeping on a hillside and dreaming of the Sacred White Buffalo appearing in the clouds above them. The American buffalo is a symbol of abundance and manifestation and the Sacred White Buffalo is a sign of hope and good experiences to come.

On the reverse side of the sculpture is a woman on a mountain top looking out into a vast sky with clouds as far as the eye can see. She represents many things to me; and you, what do you see?